As a Brave Foundation Mentor, you are a central figure within Brave working with young people who voluntarily choose to participate within the SEPT Program.

Under the program, a tailored 'Pathway Plan' is developed to guide participants through an interactive and flexible mentoring program designed to help them identify and pursue their goals – and connect to opportunities and support services – in the areas of workforce readiness and training, parenting support, health and wellbeing, financial and other life skills, and educational prospects within their local communities.

Collaboration with existing government and community service providers is central to the SEPT model. SEPT supports expecting and parenting young people to navigate multiple providers across the complex service landscape.

Once paired with their mentor, participants will have meetings addressing a range of priorities from education and workforce readiness to goal setting, health and wellbeing, finance and housing, and everyday parenting skills. With goals identified, the mentor supports the participant to connect with relevant support services. Participants also access services that directly contribute to workforce participation – such as career counselling sessions, and assistance with clothing, equipment, or police checks.

The working hours for this role are flexible and negotiable
